Gordon S. Carlson previously studied in the Electronic Visualization Laboratory in Chicago and is the founding Director of the Institute for New Media Studies at Fort Hays State University. His research engages transdisciplinary projects, many of which revolve around 3D visualization of complex concepts, new approaches to pedagogy & learning, and understanding how new media interact with rhetorical constructions through disruption and convergence.

Rebecca D. Cox is an Associate Professor of Education at Simon Fraser University, in British Columbia, Canada. Her research interests include postsecondary teaching and learning, equity in postsecondary access and opportunity, and the organizational and institutional contexts that shape college students’ experiences.

William DeGenaro is Associate Professor & Writing Program Director at the University of Michigan Dearborn. He has taught in Lebanon and the United Arab Emirates, is a past Fulbright Scholar, and holds a doctorate in Rhetoric and Composition from the University of Arizona. His scholarship on basic writing pedagogy, social class, and open-access education has appeared in various venues including Rhetoric Review and Teaching English in the Two-Year College.

Meaghan Dougherty is an instructor in the Child, Family, and Community Studies Faculty at Douglas College and a doctoral student at Simon Fraser University. Her research is grounded in critical theoretical approaches.

Robert Michael Fisher is an independent scholar, lecturer, educational consultant and author with many monographs on fear and fearlessness. Born and raised in W. Canada, currently living in the USA.

Leah DiNatale Gutenson is a Ph.D. candidate at The University of Alabama. She has taught undergraduate courses in First-year composition, writing center studies, technical writing, and professional writing. Her academic research focuses on digital representations of identity.

Sue Lang Hampton is an adult educator and program planner at Simon Fraser University. She is also an EdD candidate with her current research investigating the motivations and goals of higher education for graduates of PhD programs in the Humanities.

Kathryn Jaekel is the Assistant Director of Foundation writing courses at Iowa State University.

Shireen Keyl is a Clinical Assistant Professor with the College of Education, Department of Teaching, Learning and Sociocultural Studies at Utah State University.

Carrie Kortegast is Assistant Professor of the Practice in Higher Education in the Department of Leadership, Policy and Organizations Peabody College, Vanderbilt University.

V. Leilani Kupo is the Director of Women’s Resources and Research Center at University of California Davis.

Robert Jean LeBlanc is an Assistant Professor of Education at Cal Poly Pomona. His research interests include literacy, classroom interaction, and urban Catholic schooling. His work has appeared in journals such Research in the Teaching of English, Written Communication, The Journal of Adolescent and Adult Literacy, English Journal, and Anthropology & Education Quarterly.

Michael B. MacDonald is an ethnomusicologist and Assistant Professor of Music at MacEwan University in the Faculty of Fine Arts and Communications, Western Canada’s only BMus in Jazz and Contemporary Popular Music. He teaches courses in the history of Popular Music, Jazz, Western Art Music, Cultural Studies, and the music industry, and publishes on topics in Popular Music with special attention to the cultural studies of music learning, Aesthetics in Critical Youth Studies, and popular music education.

Christina Neigel is an Associate Professor in the Department of Library and Information Technology at the University of the Fraser Valley, Canada and a former librarian. Her research interests are in visual/textual discourse analysis, library labor, and collaborative teaching.

Kim Nickel is a non-teaching faculty member in the School of Criminology and Criminal Justice at the University of the Fraser Valley, Canada. Her dissertation work centres on practica/field based learning in public safety and social justice environments.

Tina Pippin is a Professor in the Department of Religious Studies at Agnes Scott College.

Rana Raddawi (Ph.D., Sorbonne) has taught in the West and the Middle East for more than 10 years. Her research and teaching interests include intercultural studies, critical pedagogy, emotional intelligence in education, translation studies, technology in the classroom, writing for specific purposes, advanced academic writing, public speaking, gender empowerment, and curriculum development. She has translated more than 15 published articles and three books. She is currently Associate Professor at American University of Sharjah.

Amy L. Roberts is a secondary school Arts and English teacher of over 12 years. This examination began during research for her M.Ed. which she has now successfully completed from the University of Ontario Institute of Technology.

James J. Sosnoski is the author of Token Professionals and Master Critics, Modern Skeletons in Postmodern Closets, and co-editor of Configuring History: Teaching the Harlem Renaissance through VR Cityscapes, as well as various essays on instructional technology, computer-assisted pedagogy, and online collaboration. Based on Cognitive Linguistics, he developed Configural Discourse Analysis. His current research focus is on conceptual logistics—the study of the uses of research concepts.